Closing Remarks

MEASO 2018 is a natural continuation of the last 200 years of Antarctic/Southern Ocean scientific investigation. In closing the conference, I will reflect on the special qualities of that history and how they remain relevant and instructive today. The interaction of policy objectives and research objectives are important in this age, and we can learn from this history on how scientists and policy makers can best interact. I will also provide some thoughts on how the outcomes of MEASO 2018 will serve policy making and management of the region in the future.
